Trust Fund Set Up For Leukemia Victim

PALMYRA, Va. - Striken with leukemia, Donald Reardon, age 9, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin B. Reardon, of rural Palmyra, is in Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore after an operation for a bone marrow transfer that will cost at least $135,000.

Because Donald has an identical twin, Ronald, who provided the correct type of marrow, the operation has a better than average chance of success.

Reardon is an electronics salesman in Charlottesville. There are five children, age 2 to 10. Although he has substantial insurance, the operation cost could be financially ruinous to him. Even if shared by all Fluvanna, a small farming county, it could take about $10 each man, woman and child, assuming no insurance, to foot the bill.

A trust fund has been set up at the National Bank and Trust Co. at nearby Scottsville and Fork Union to receive contributions.

If Fall is Here, Can Winter Be Far Behind?

Those brisk, fall breezes are portends of what's still to come: winter.

With winters becoming increasingly rigorous, it's not too early to begin thinking about ways to "lose your cool" this coming season.

Dressing for cold weather involves common-sense rules such as wearing garments that fit snugly and button up around the neck.

Experts advise dressing in layers. Layers trap warm air for maximum comfort and permit removal of clothing as you become overheated. However, don't wear too many layers, as you'll only compress and eliminate that warm air.

Be sure to wrap up in a muffler or scarf, and of course, you'll need headgear and boots.

Keep in mind that fabrics that are slick and cool to the touch won't be as warm as those that are soft and fluffy. Natural fabrics such as down, wool and cotton are considered good insulators of air.

To avoid wool itchiness, experts suggest wearing another fabric between your skin and the wool garment.

Age and weight are factors to consider in dressing for winter; older people and slender people tend to get cold more quickly, for example.
